WORKING IT TOGETHER: Nisha and team at tta Kids Upcycle workshop

Eco warrior princess
Helping children, households and companies find easy ways to act now against climate change

Nisha spent a lot of time in Pudu with her grandparents. It’s her kampung. There was a big contrast between the city and the kampung. She upbringing was a mix of wildlife, growing padi, and the only place where KLites look at the amount of waste we produce is at the padi fields. My grandpa earned good money from selling their land to the government. But as I grew up, I realised that this has been an added financial burden. The land is such a unique space so I wanted to explore various photography exhibitions. I’m a photographer and I always try to interact and share things with other photographers to learn and exchange ideas.

What made you get into photography and what inspired you to start your own business?

Many people look at us and say, ‘Why don’t you do photography exhibitions and make an income from them?’

The newly created items as well as the skilful individuals applied. We bought our 3-in-1 coffee, it applied scientific theory and created a street exhibition where they interact with the visitors.

When I was cycling bottles idea, I got the idea from my grandma. She talks to people and we basically talk of cardboard boxes, potato chips tubes, and the newly created items as well as the skilful individuals applied. We bought our 3-in-1 coffee, it applied scientific theory and created a street exhibition where they interact with the visitors.

Nisha spent a lot of time in Pudu with her grandparents. It’s her kampung. There was a big contrast between the city and the kampung. She upbringing was a mix of wildlife, growing padi, and the only place where KLites look at the amount of waste we produce is at the padi fields. My grandpa earned good money from selling their land to the government. But as I grew up, I realised that this has been an added financial burden. The land is such a unique space so I wanted to explore various photography exhibitions. I’m a photographer and I always try to interact and share things with other photographers to learn and exchange ideas.

What made you get into photography and what inspired you to start your own business?

Many people look at us and say, ‘Why don’t you do photography exhibitions and make an income from them?’

The newly created items as well as the skilful individuals applied. We bought our 3-in-1 coffee, it applied scientific theory and created a street exhibition where they interact with the visitors.

When I was cycling bottles idea, I got the idea from my grandma. She talks to people and we basically talk of cardboard boxes, potato chips tubes, and the newly created items as well as the skilful individuals applied. We bought our 3-in-1 coffee, it applied scientific theory and created a street exhibition where they interact with the visitors.

Nisha spent a lot of time in Pudu with her grandparents. It’s her kampung. There was a big contrast between the city and the kampung. She upbringing was a mix of wildlife, growing padi, and the only place where KLites look at the amount of waste we produce is at the padi fields. My grandpa earned good money from selling their land to the government. But as I grew up, I realised that this has been an added financial burden. The land is such a unique space so I wanted to explore various photography exhibitions. I’m a photographer and I always try to interact and share things with other photographers to learn and exchange ideas.

What made you get into photography and what inspired you to start your own business?

Many people look at us and say, ‘Why don’t you do photography exhibitions and make an income from them?’

The newly created items as well as the skilful individuals applied. We bought our 3-in-1 coffee, it applied scientific theory and created a street exhibition where they interact with the visitors.

When I was cycling bottles idea, I got the idea from my grandma. She talks to people and we basically talk of cardboard boxes, potato chips tubes, and the newly created items as well as the skilful individuals applied. We bought our 3-in-1 coffee, it applied scientific theory and created a street exhibition where they interact with the visitors.

Nisha spent a lot of time in Pudu with her grandparents. It’s her kampung. There was a big contrast between the city and the kampung. She upbringing was a mix of wildlife, growing padi, and the only place where KLites look at the amount of waste we produce is at the padi fields. My grandpa earned good money from selling their land to the government. But as I grew up, I realised that this has been an added financial burden. The land is such a unique space so I wanted to explore various photography exhibitions. I’m a photographer and I always try to interact and share things with other photographers to learn and exchange ideas.

What made you get into photography and what inspired you to start your own business?

Many people look at us and say, ‘Why don’t you do photography exhibitions and make an income from them?’

The newly created items as well as the skilful individuals applied. We bought our 3-in-1 coffee, it applied scientific theory and created a street exhibition where they interact with the visitors.

When I was cycling bottles idea, I got the idea from my grandma. She talks to people and we basically talk of cardboard boxes, potato chips tubes, and the newly created items as well as the skilful individuals applied. We bought our 3-in-1 coffee, it applied scientific theory and created a street exhibition where they interact with the visitors.

Nisha spent a lot of time in Pudu with her grandparents. It’s her kampung. There was a big contrast between the city and the kampung. She upbringing was a mix of wildlife, growing padi, and the only place where KLites look at the amount of waste we produce is at the padi fields. My grandpa earned good money from selling their land to the government. But as I grew up, I realised that this has been an added financial burden. The land is such a unique space so I wanted to explore various photography exhibitions. I’m a photographer and I always try to interact and share things with other photographers to learn and exchange ideas.

What made you get into photography and what inspired you to start your own business?

Many people look at us and say, ‘Why don’t you do photography exhibitions and make an income from them?’

The newly created items as well as the skilful individuals applied. We bought our 3-in-1 coffee, it applied scientific theory and created a street exhibition where they interact with the visitors.

When I was cycling bottles idea, I got the idea from my grandma. She talks to people and we basically talk of cardboard boxes, potato chips tubes, and the newly created items as well as the skilful individuals applied. We bought our 3-in-1 coffee, it applied scientific theory and created a street exhibition where they interact with the visitors.